MR. STOCKDALE, PICCADILLY.

Doveridge, Dec. 2, 1790.

S I R,

THE following accounts are published for the use of the Young Members of the New Parliament in Ireland.— They have been collected at various times. No particular mode of arrangement has been observed, as I never had any intention of publishing them. Mr. Sinclair intended to lay a state of the Irish Finances before the public. I hope he will do so, as it cannot come from a better quarter. Possibly these Accounts may be of some use to him. I hope they are correct; if any errors should appear, I shall be obliged to any Gentleman to point them out, and they shall be rectified. They are taken from the public accounts laid before Parliament every session. There are a few few aggregate articles, about the component parts of which there may be some criticism. They are but few.

I should be glad to have the minds of people on this side of the water turned a little more towards Ireland. The more the situation of that country is known, the better it will be for the general interest of the British empire.—Great Britain, for its own sake, ought to give every possible encouragement to Ireland, as I am certain there are not upon earth men more attached to the British Constitution, and the House of Brunswick, than the Irish; or who would with more zeal risk their lives and fortunes in defence of both.

I am, Sir,

Your most humble servant,

H. CAVENDISH.

LORD LIEUTENANTS.
